LEGEND - 1980

The Beginning of a Facelift

The year of 1980 may well be remembered as the year "before", considering it was the year before the freshmen would have a place at North. It was a year of adjustment and preparation.

The school would go from one of the smallest enrollments (1300) to larger than for sometime. Because of the small enrollment several teachers were lost and there were fewer classes offered. Renovations had to be made. A girls' physical education complex was added, along with the updating of the fine arts, science and business departments.

Besides all of this, the year was unique and had exceptional events for we Redskins. Not only did North receive the honor of being chosen by Mayor Robert Armstrong to be the sister high school with Nichidai High School in Takaoka, Japan, Fort Wayne's sister city, but also our football team went undefeated. They had a record of 10-0 and won the SAC championship. No team had done as well at North Side in 30 years.

The trends and traditions of the 1980 year were left for the opening of the new decade.

This was only a preview of the power North's football team displayed this year.

Chief Mac, Junior Vance Hernandez, did a very good job of promoting spirit at the games.

The Band at Nichidai High School, in Takaoka, Japan, our sister school, participated in Fort Wayne's Three Rivers Festival.

... A Forgotten Story

A common sight in the cafeteria during all lunch periods, impatience when paying.

Tony William found that counting with his fingers could really help him with his accounting.

Peter Collins, disguised as Dracula, looks like many of us feel on Monday mornings.

Kay Olry seems to agree with Win Moses, Mayor, while Tim Perkins appears apprehensive.

A quite normal situation for students who stayed up or out late and barely made it to school.

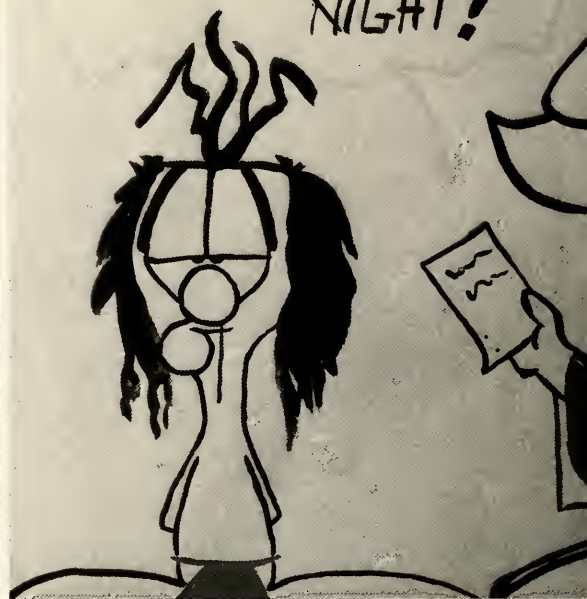

A homecoming activity - a seven foot tall bear was burned at the bonfire after the powder-puff game.

Senior Shelby Plackburn, escorted by Mr. Bierbaum, rode to a victory as the Homecoming queen.

Fashions: They Come and Go

For the past few years, the fashion world has been in a state of flux. The styles that were once popular have been replaced by new ones. The fashion world is always changing, and it is always interesting to see what is new and what is old.

One of the most popular styles of the past few years has been the "bohemian" style. This style is characterized by long, flowing dresses and skirts, and by a variety of patterns and colors. It is a style that is very popular with young people, and it is also very popular with older people.

Another popular style of the past few years has been the "disco" style. This style is characterized by short, tight-fitting clothes, and by a variety of patterns and colors. It is a style that is very popular with young people, and it is also very popular with older people.

Sweaters always seemed to style, shown here on Eric Gibson, Larry Marshall, and John and John, for they could be found to match anything.

When the band went to the State Marching contest in Terre Haute some members felt everyone had not put all they could into it.

Trina Hay, dressed as a rag doll, enjoyed herself while making other people happy at North's Halloween party.

Enjoyment can be found in painting as shown by this student, who has a creative eye.

Dave Reynolds gives Laura Grueb the evil eye and proves that a smile or even a look can brighten up someone's day.

Gerry Nix seems a little upset about a math problem, but when anyone gets confused about a problem, his whole mood can change.

So Here I Sit

Trapped in a building
Where society places me
Go to school
Get your education
It will help you make a stand in life

But the walls are closing in on me
And my mind can not concentrate on anything else Except . . .
My need for escape from Society's laws, teacher's rules, assignments, and uncomfortable desks

If, but for a day I could be freed of these chains
Break the rules meant to be followed
And allow my mind and body run free
My mind: through a good book or daydreaming of new goals to achieve
My body: quickly making its way through a golden wheatfield in search of my favorite spot by the stream

No, not all can be taught in classrooms
Nor can all knowledge be attained through professors, hardbacks, and filmstrips
One can not hope to make a stand in life
If they've never been given the chance to fail
Or experience the healing of a scraped knee, bruised heart, or a pony ride

Reading about the salty old sea is not like tasting it for oneself or feeling the gritty spray wash against one's face
Watching a flower (or love) bloom on the silver screen
Can not be compared to the freshness and sweetness of actually being there
But society places me . . . so here I sit.

Highway of Life

Where is life taking me
What road am I to choose

The U-turns and the stop signs
Have made me quite confused

At times I'm going one way
But a detour's straight ahead

The sign reads watch the bumps—
It's not the bruises that I dread

All these people seem to know
Their way to get around

Their lives have been paved
Growing up in this small town

But I must take the crossroads
To discover life on my own

I haven't yielded thus far
And look how much I've grown

My journey is not over
And I can not see a dead end

So I will keep on driving
Fate is just around the bend

Carrie Schaefer

Salute the slungish walk with no bounce in the step.
Salute the rumpled hair
that stands on end,
refusing to be combed into place.
Salute the clothes that look like you slept in them;
the dragging shoestrings;
the loose papers crammed in a book—
and let us not forget the tired, bloodshot, sleepy eyes.
Salute the genius—
on Monday mornings!

Spare Time

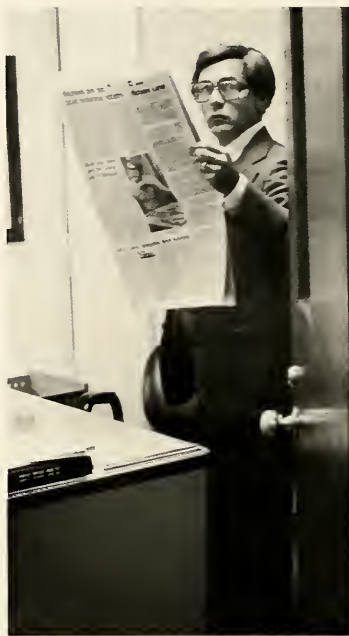

If carefully planned, one can find one to possibly 60 minutes of spare time; the "lucky" ones can find more. When students discovered some extra moments, they selected different ways to enjoy it.

Listening to music or watching television seemed to be the favorites. The reason was the wide variety of entertainment they gave.

Others enjoyed making their own music. Many students used their empty hour(s) to improve their musical skills.

Others also tried to better themselves during this time, but not in music. Whether on the school's teams or not, athletes, both novices and veterans, spent time enjoying their respective games. Because of the ample practice places, basketball and tennis were the easiest to get involved in.

Other activities included rollerskating, reading, coin collecting, eating, working, going to movies, and painting. Even something as necessary as sleeping could only be caught up during spare time, reinforcing the advantages and the need of it.

Assistant Principal Robert Passwater reads his newspaper during a spare moment.

Reading provided an enjoyable way for Lisa Wood to use her time.

Chris Ohneck and Denise Sukow take a moment to talk between classes.

Laura Bloom shows horses in contests. Doing this she received numerous awards.

Stringd instruments require much practice to perfect them. Practicing is Kevin Colcord.

Going to the park to play ball filled the time of many students.

Boredom

Boredom—(boar 'dum)n. The condition of being bored or disinterested.

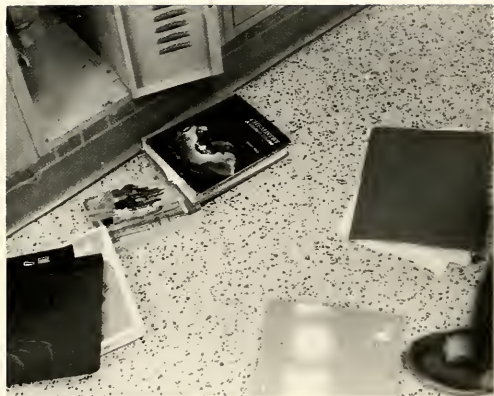

Boredom seemed to be a common ailment among average teenagers, but not a very serious one.

There were several ways to cure it, aside from aspirin, and most North Siders had no trouble in finding them.

Watching TV proved to be most popular, since there was always something entertaining on the tube. With the season's new shows like, "Out of the Blue," "Benson," "California Fever" and "The Lazarus Syndrome," along with last year's favorites, "Mork and Mindy," "Soap," "Eight is Enough," "Little House on the Prairie," and "Saturday Night Live," a person had a wide variety to choose from.

A number of students had their own stereos and were into music. With groups like Styx, the Cars, Kansas, Van Halen, Supertramp, Fleetwood Mac, Little Riverband and ELO, there was plenty to listen to.

Homework and chores were done as a last resort, but as one student said, "I rarely get that desperate."

Some days, the most exciting thing in a person's day seems to be a disaster.

Different habits show up when people become bored—nail biting, thumb twiddling, and as Steve Wyatt is doing, resting one's head on one's hand.

Reading English may be boring to Kelly Falls, but it is a way to fill the time.

Band does have its dull moments, as Drummer Bill Noel finds out.

Our friends help us do many things, even if it is to hold our shoes while stretching our feet.

"No man is an island"
together, as friends,
we form a peninsula
we stand on the shore of our memories facing the strange waters ahead

thunder
from the vast, formless ocean surrounds us
each of us is called to go forth alone
into waters alive
with the effect of change

each of us, too
knows that behind us lies the sturdy haven of land
a land on which we may tread sure-footedly
when forced to retreat
by battering waves

Sheryl Kinder, Beth Wehrenberg and Wendy Dutton exercised a familiar pastime during lunch period, doing homework for several various reasons.

Dondi Deuhmig and two friends relax and take a break to get some fresh air during lunch, but only if the weather permits, to relax or just joke around.

An everyday conversation between two friends; discussing such things as what they were going to do that night or over the weekend.

Chris Ruoff and Kelly Wilcox walked through the halls, talking between classes—a most natural scene to see; taking it easy before class starts.

A familiar sight—friends escaping the pressures of school long enough to take a walk outside the school or to go out to lunch.

Seniors Denise and Diane Sukow appear to be the best of friends. Maybe the secret to their compatibility is their common interests. Both are varsity cheerleaders and are members of the band.

Juniors Tammy Perkins and Clara Rowlette share a few friendly words and a smile with Leonard.

Lunch is the best time for being with friends and having a good time. Here Junior Bob McCorkle, especially, takes advantage of it.

Fantasy

Dreaming about tomorrow, What are we going to be doing a year from now? ten? twenty? How long will all of us be in touch? Are we going to be friends with our high school classmates? The future is ours if we care for it. We all fantasize getting married to the perfect mate, having a job that satisfies us, raising children. As always death will prevail; some of us will go at an early time. But make the each day a joy, live it to your fullest, fantasize your dreams. Reach for it, grab it, and soon it will be yours.

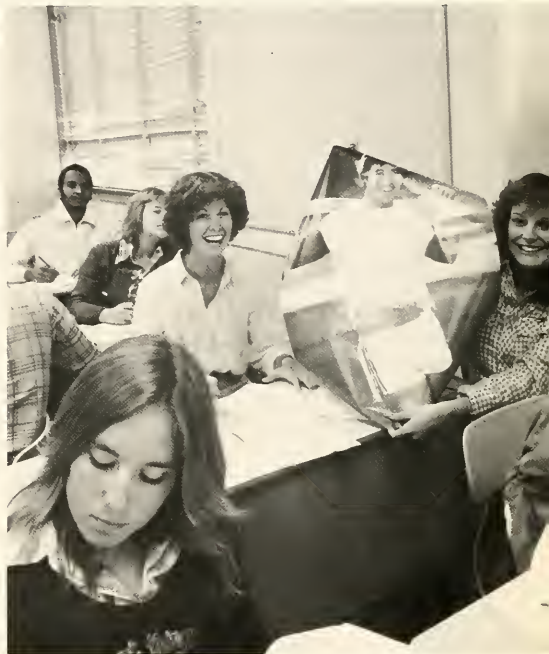

Mary O'Keeffe

Teachers not only have to be work associates but friends as well. Here Mr. Howe and Ms. Wichern have a friendly conversation.

Seniors Sally Stillwell and Ana Whiteman share one of their favorite posters.

The Turning of Time

Isn't it strange how
The turning of time
Can effect the mood
And change the mind

From right to wrong
And good to bad
Where's the closeness
We once had?

A friendship gone sour
A love gone astray
Oh, I long to turn back
For life's yesterdays

Carrie Schaffer

Members of the Junior Powder Puff team get together for a few friendly words after the game.

McDonald's was not only everyone's favorite place to eat, but was a favorite for washing hands, asking directions, and just generally hanging out, especially since one could visit a number of friends who were employees.

Pat Newhaus enjoys working at Keltch's on West State. Liking the people you work with is one of the main concerns when deciding where to get a job.

A large majority of weekly allowances was spent during lunch period. As illustrated here, sometimes one lunch was just not enough to cure those hunger pains.

Jeff Neely, like many people, works at Parkview Memorial Hospital. One of his jobs is taking trays off the elevator and putting them somewhere, so they can be distributed to the patients.

Ken Hosier acquires most of his money by working as a busboy at Fish of Stroh.

Greenbacks were scarce

Money is one of those things that is "here today and gone tomorrow," which for many students was more accurate than "a penny saved is a penny earned."

Money wasn't really scarce; it just didn't buy as much as it had before.

A large percentage of students had after-school jobs, and their occupations ranged from waitresses to dance teachers.

Local restaurants and fast food places like McDonald's, Wendy's, Atz's, Penguin Point, Fish of Stroh, Burger Chef, and Pizza Hut employed the majority of the working students, but a large number of people were into retail sales as well. Thom McAnn, Fashion Barn, Sears, Penny's, Foxmoor, Speice, and Glenway Bargain Center were a few of the popular ones. Others earned their money working at local movie theatres, supermarkets, drugstores, or for their parents.

With a job came the responsibility of paying for almost everything themselves. The realization of how much a dollar really bought hit hard.

After a person paid for all of the little necessities, there wasn't much left for saving or spending. Some were concerned about the amount of time they spent working and never having anything to show for it; they were especially concerned about money for college.

Most of their money went for car payments, gas, insurance, school supplies, lunches, and other miscellaneous "musts."

Since inflation was increasing and the price of gas was up over $1, it was hard for students to end up with any spending money.

The money they did have, though, was stretched to its limits. There was always enough for athletic events, no matter the sacrifice. Movies became a luxury at $3.50 a shot, and were soon treated like one. The traditional nights out for pizza were converted to nights congregating at a friend's house for snacks and TV.

Students found themselves, because economic situations, doing the same things that their parents had done when they were young. Surprisingly, they found they liked it.

Tim Hattery, Joe Hardesty and Greg Miller participated in cross country, which included going to a hard-working camp during the summer.

These football players worked intensely over the summer to achieve everything they did this year.

This picture illustrates what "chow time" at the men's cross country camp would be like.

A Time For Rest ?

Summer is a time for rest and rejuvenation. School is out and your time is your own; but is it really?

To some summer only marks the end of one cycle and the beginning of another.

Summer may mean that students are out of school, but they are never away from it.

Most athletes, like the band and the cheerleaders, attend camps during the summer to learn new skills and to perfect old ones.

For band members, cheerleaders, football, volleyball and tennis players, cross country runners and even teachers, the summer is full of preparation and work.

A person hardly recuperates from one year before the next is upon him, but these are the times that will be remembered.

At camp, the cross country team did have time to do some other things beside just run. These guys got up an easy going game of badminton.

Mrs. Claryn Myers gets ready to tee off while playing in the Edwards' Open.

Mr. Mark Tipple also played the golf links in the Edwards Open.

How Did You Do It ... ?

They came in all different numbers, some solo while others arrived with about thirty others. From the first day of school, it was evident that there was no one way to come to school.

Some had to use the primitive method of walking. One step in front of the other was their motto. As it got colder, the walk seemed longer.

Others advanced to two wheels. Along with bicycles, mopeds and motorcycles provided a quicker-than-walking but cheaper-than-driving-a-car way to get to school.

There were the lucky ones though that enjoyed the luxury of the four-wheeled machine. The automobiles ranged in style from 1979 Camaros to 1965 Pintos, and in color from deep black to pure white. Some cars had scars—from past accidents, while others appeared flawless. It seemed the only thing they had in common was that they ran on gas, which reached over $1 a gallon.

For those people who lived too far to walk or ride a bike, there was only one way to beat the gas crunch; the bus. One yellow school bus pulled into North every day, and several PTC buses delivered kids as well.

Parking was sometimes scarce, but the owner of this bike had no problem finding a spot.

Junior Chris Bender finds riding a motorcycle to school a convenient form of transportation.

Juniors Von Jeffers and Ken Knox sometimes used the old method of transportation, walking.

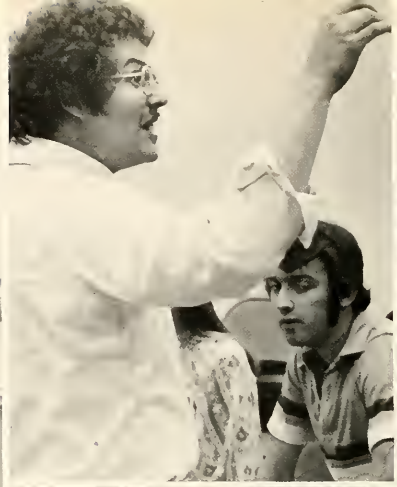

Some were old, some were new, but this was the most unique car parked in North Side's parking lot. Senior Eric Hinsey had the flames painted on the front of his car by his older brother Dirk.

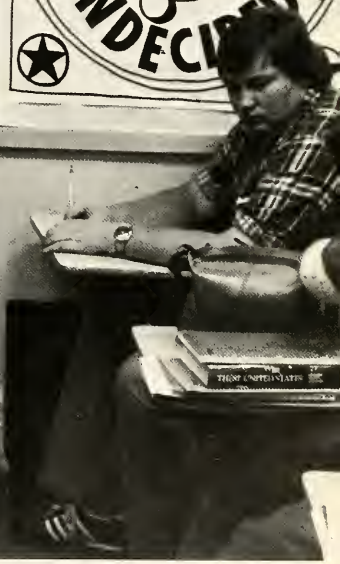

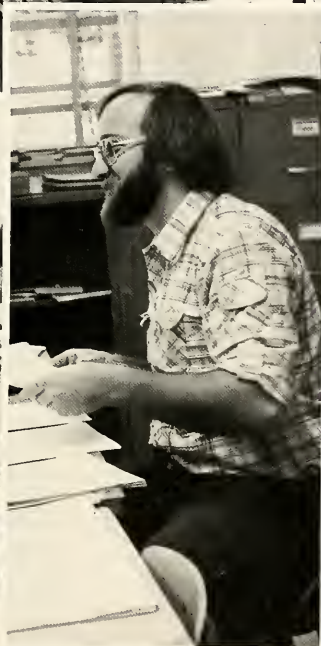

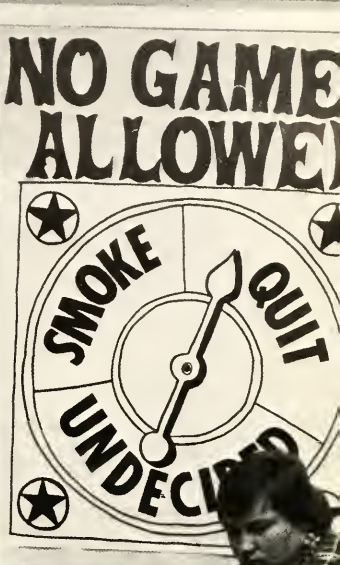

One yellow school bus delivered students to school. It is the first time North Side has ever had any yellow busses since the re-districting was done.

Sophomore Becky Voors covers her face in a moment of confusion as Miss Thiele explains a difficult assignment on the parts of speech to her English class.

Language Grows

Each person usually has some unique thing about him, and in Mr. Gruver's case, it's his teaching style. He teaches his English classes with comic strips, editorial cartoons, letters to the editor, and songs.

"But," said Mr. Gruver, "I don't just use any comic; I look for the ones that deal with domestic issues, world problems, and mainly human life. They aren't just ha-ha type things; they make a point."

Mr. Gruver's main goal, besides just getting the English taught is to get the students to participate. To do this, he sometimes used the popular comic strips, "B.C.," "Garfield," and "Tucker," and "I always use Peanuts," said Mr. Gruver.

Besides the fun things, though, there was the regular straightforward aspects of an English class too. His students were drilled constantly on diagramming, spelling, and the parts of speech. "We do the parts of speech until they die— and that's a verb!" said Mr. Gruver.

Where Mr. Gruver finds his method of using comics effective in teaching English, other teachers find that the traditional way of teaching is effective for them.

"Hopefully, as we study literature, students will realize that we learn about life and human nature from these stories," said Miss Hazelett.

It seems that most teachers, besides just teaching the basics of their particular subjects, try to include some understanding about life as well.

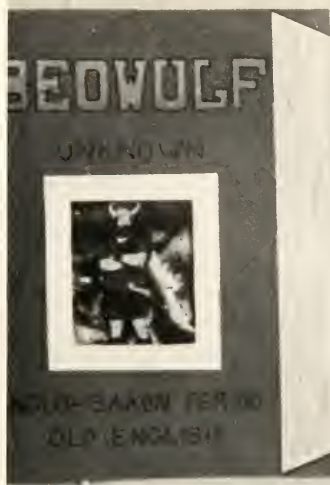

Sophomores aren't the only ones that have study the parts of speech. Here, Liz Cuney does an assignment on participles, gerunds and infinitives.

Obviously Mr. Gruver's signs do more than just decorate his walls, because here all of his students are quiet as he explains something on the board.

Video tapes are used in just about every class, but few classes have the privilege of watching Henry and Mr. Morton talk about the parts of speech.

Reading Beowulf is probably not anyone's favorite pastime, but here Junior Kelly Falls is making the best of it. Beowulf was a great warrior during Arthurian times.

Once Upon A Time

Once upon a time in the land of the river rats, there were eight sages, Kip Omerod, Ken Miller, Myron Henderson, Dan Heath, Val Harker, Charles Feller, Don Evans, and Dale Doerffler.

Each morning at 8 o'clock as the bell tolled, the eight men made their sojourn to the social studies hall where they battled the dragon of ignorance with the great sword of knowledge.

Each taught his own subject in his own way. Mr. Evans taught his government classes with a magic slate, Mr. Feller, with a magic lantern that projected images on the wall. Mr. Omerod taught his psychology and sociology using weird ink blots. Mr. Heath, who taught criminology, got his students so enthralled in the case that they weren't able to let their attention stray, while Mr. Henderson, Mr. Miller, Mr. Harker and Mr. Doerffler taught their classes by simply rattling off names, dates and places until they were implanted in the brain.

And while they didn't all necessarily live happily ever after, they sure did try.

Work In The Mass Media

Last year's Northerner staff has improved itself with age and the addition of members of the sophomore classes. Consisting of 18 members, the staff has shown that with their combined efforts, various skills, and talents, they could make a well-rounded news team. The Legend staff consisted of five members and shared the four photographers with the newspaper staff.

Various staffers not enrolled in Miss Norma Thiele's special journalism classes contributed material on their own time. The classes served as on-the-job training for the members.

New editors were selected at the beginning of each semester by Miss Thiele, advisor, while there was no staff change for the Legend.

The main purpose of the Northerner was to inform the student body, advertisers, and various subscribers of school events. The paper also served as a sample of reporting and writing for a future in the mass media. The Legend records the passing members of the three year span of students.

Journalism is growing more and more popular as the field expands. Once a male-dominated profession, the art of newswriting has been displayed in recent years by both men and women alike. Careers involved with journalism include working in photography, public relations, radio announcing, television broadcasting, and various jobs within a newspaper plant. The journalism classes held by Miss Norma Thiele serve as on-the-job training and a sample of reporting and writing for a future in the mass media.

Dear Sirs:

In response to your question about North Side's business department, I have found the following information.

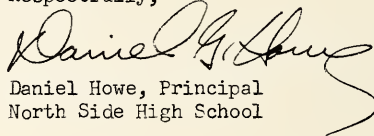

Six hundred and eighty-two students took part in our business program, participating in Accounting, Business Arithmetic, Business Law, Consumer Education, C.O.E., D.E., Distributive Marketing, Recordkeeping, Secretarial Practice, Shorthand, and Typing.

Our staff consists of Mrs. Sandra Macy, Mr. Dale Goon, Mr. Richard Irving, Mrs. Wilma Ashe, Miss Virginia Ayres, and Mrs. Irma Johnson.

The major objective of the department was to teach the students skills that would be useful later in life.

I hope this answers your question. If we can be of any further service, please notify us as soon as possible.

Respectfully,

Daniel Howe, Principal

Music Boasts 554

The Music department, one of the largest groups in the school, boasted of roughly 554 students. These students participated in either one of the bands, one of the choirs, or were active in the orchestra.

The department, headed by Dr. John Hill, was a progressive type system. A person was usually vocally or instrumentally inclined and so would start off at the bottom his sophomore year and then work his way up according to skill and effort.

Mr. Ed King, band instructor, worked with those who were instrumentally inclined and helped them work their way up. A person would start with varsity and marching band and work up through concert and stage band in hopes of making it into North's jazz band, the Wildsiders. Senior Lloyd Kirkpatrick described that final step by saying, "It widens your musical background and gives you a chance to play with the most talented musicians in school."

The vocal program, like the instrumental, was a progressive one. Dr. Hill, head of the choirs, would work with people as they progressed from training choir to A'Cappella and then later to Madrigals and Troubadours.

Also in the Music department were the Orchestra and string ensemble, coordinated by Mrs. Julie Seeger.

Industrial Arts - True Grit

Being sent to the Industrial Arts department to deliver a message seemed like an easy mission to me, but little did I know!

I made my way into the first room and was instantly overwhelmed by machines. There must have been at least fifty. They were so complicated I couldn't tell where one stopped and another began. I asked where the teacher was.

"Oh, he's over there," a kid said. "He is the one wearing the apron." I saw many aprons. "Yeah, but he's the only one wearing goggles like he is supposed to be."

I saw my informant gluing wood together, concluding that I must be in the woods class. I should have figured it out sooner though, since sawdust was flying all over the place.

When questioned, the kid said "Well, I'm making a lamp, but I'm doing something different. I'm stacking the wood instead of laying it side by side," he said.

How would it work? "Well, he's going to teach us, but all you really have to do is drill a hole through the middle and stick the wire from that jobby on top down through the hole in the bottom and then plug it in. But first you have to hook the socket up to the end of the wire," he said.

Thus enlightened, I made my way to the teacher, only to learn I was in the wrong room.

Next door, I had the same dilemma all over again, only this time it was worse—machines all over, only they were used for working metal.

Metal shavings were lying everywhere, and people were walking around with black hands. But this I could handle. I figured it was probably pretty dirty work and it was all part of the package. My biggest horror was the far corner of the room, but my curiosity overcame me, and I went to check it out anyway.

With my nose covered, the smell wasn't as bad as I thought. I learned the little black stalls were for welding.

This stuff was getting kind of interesting. I watched a person who was welding something, when someone handed me a pair of goggles and said, "Look through these and then you can see what's happening."

Not wanting to reveal my stupidity, I said, "Hey that's pretty neat!" a little too loudly.

Then the person doing the welding turned around and said, "Can I help you?" It was the teacher.

Well, I delivered my note and tried to make a quick escape. First, though, I was led to the teacher's desk to look at a set of jack stands that one of the students had made. "Those are really nice," I said, and made my way back to class.

After this I did some investigating and found out that those weren't the only Industrial Arts classes.

Besides Metals and Woods, there was drafting and Power Mechanics, and that there were roughly 391 students taking the classes.

Under the Microscope

The general term of science encompasses everything from anthropology to zoology. At North, however, the science department was a bit more specific.

Mr. Mark Tipple headed the staff of teachers including Mr. Beryl Lewis, Mr. Merle Rice, and Mr. Dean Slavens. According to Mr. Tipple, they did a good job at giving their students a basic background in scientific areas. He added that the teachers' solid backgrounds and their willingness to work with the students made the department even better.

The teachers, though limited, taught many different subjects. Understanding chemicals and their effects was related in Chemistry I & II and Advanced Chemistry, both taught by Mr. Lewis. Mr. Rice's classes centered on the Man Made World course, applied science, and physics. Mr. Dean Slavens also instructed the latter class, which combined math with science, as well as Advanced Biology. Earth Science involved understanding concepts like the formation of rocks and was taught by Mr. Tipple.

All the courses developed an understanding of science for future use. Mr. Tipple felt the things the students learned complemented the teaching of colleges. Besides college, a science background could be helpful in many jobs. Medicine relies deeply on chemicals and comprehending their uses. Almost every type of industry employs science people for research and developing new products. All the classes in the department helped to bring science out from the microscope and into the world.

Math - Not Just 2 + 2

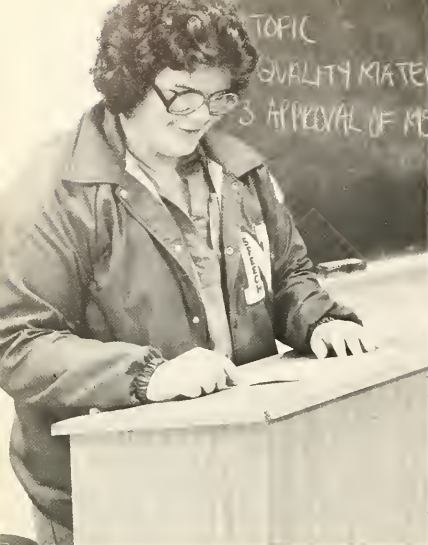

"The enthusiasm of the teachers really helped the math courses," commented Mr. Robert Lovell, department head, adding, "If the teachers act bored, the students will pick it up and be bored." The teachers he referred to included Mr. Dave Bierbaum, Mr. By Hey, Mr. Don Hunter, Mr. Randall Liechty, Mr. John Stauffer and himself.

The eleven courses offered ranged from general math to computer programming. The objective of the classes was not only to improve the fundamental skills in math, such as adding and multiplying, but also to prepare students for college and jobs. A good math background can be essential when going into such fields as business or engineering. Mr. Lovell feels the teachers did an excellent job in preparing the students.

The most specialized was the computer programming class, where students learned how to get a computer to perform as they wished. The background offered seems to be more important as society becomes more computerized.

Besides the computer terminals, other teaching aids were used. Calculators were present in some classes along with overhead projectors. Mr. Lovell also remarked, while smiling, that "colored chalk is a teacher's best tool," showing part of the brighter side of the math department.

Senior Ruth Gingrich, member of the speech team, practices her material for an upcoming speech meet. Ruth was on North Side's speech team for sophomore, junior and senior year.

Act II - Scene I

"I love drama; it's my hobby," said Ms. Claryn Myers, instructor of speech and drama. But she also said that as a class, she enjoys beginning speech more than drama because, "Kids just don't take drama as seriously as I do."

Ms. Myers had her hands full. Not only did she have her usual beginning and competitive speech classes, she took over the drama department from Mr. Record, who left last year, and was also in charge of the Arrowettes.

Being the speech coach, Ms. Myers was responsible for teaching the twenty team members, the contest material, for getting the team members into the type competition they liked, and then for helping them perfect their delivery.

Twenty meets were listed. In a meet, team members competed in one of two categories, either an original event or an interpretive event. In the interpretive events, a person took an author's material, like a cutting from a play, and then read it through for meaning, and was scored on how well he was able to deliver it.

In the original events a person did the writing himself and then read his own material for expression and meaning, and was scored on that.

"Ms. Myers is always telling us to have the killer instinct, and I was about ready to kill one of my judges" said senior Ruth Gingrich.

"It's a lot of fun but, a lot of work also," added senior Nina Lamb.

It is often hard to distinguish the drama department from drama as a class. Often the students that take drama as a class, are members of the drama department as well, and spend a lot of their class time preparing and rehearsing for drama productions.

"It's a creative talent. It's nice to watch things take shape," said Ms. Myers of the drama productions.

The department traditionally puts on a fall comedy and a spring musical, "But" said Ms. Myers, "If there is time I'd like to do a few kiddie shows; I just don't know right now."

When asked about the things that were needed to put on a production, Ms. Myers mentioned rehearsals, props, costumes, publicity complimentary tickets, and royalties. To a question about the budget Ms. Myers replied, "My what?" When Ms. Myers took over the department, it was $1100 in debt. "We didn't have any money, I've been changing everything hoping to make money off the play, and then pay my bills."

Senior Patty Neuhaus and Junior Eric Hoffman rehearse for the fall comedy "Here lies Jeremy Troy." Patty played the part of Tina Winslow and Eric portrayed Charlie Bickle.

Time Out

The set-up for the physical education department went through many changes. The reason centered around a student being able to receive full credit for an advanced class.

Mr. Robert Taliaferro, department head, was pleased with the change. He said that his students were, "slighted in past years because they did as much work in physical education classes as the other classes but only got half credit."

The classes, also taught by Mrs. Diane Cole, Mr. John Ankenbruck, and Mr. Myron Dickerson, were altered in that the teachers brought some "academics" into the classes. They had lectures and required written tests and term papers.

The course list, however, remained unchanged. In sophomore P.E., required for graduation, and advanced P.E., students worked on improving their skills in team sports, such as flag football, soccer, and volleyball, as well as individual games. Body Building and Team Sports was meant to improve the complete physical health of a student. Though they lifted weights to develop strength, the students also learned how to care for their bodies and to keep them in shape.

The Gym and Dance Class, opened the doors to all kinds of dance, from ballet to disco. The students planned and performed in a variety dance show in the spring.

The only class that met regularly in a classroom was the Tobacco-Alcohol-Narcotics class. Here the teachers concentrated on informing students of the dangers and the myths of using tobacco, alcohol, and narcotics. By bringing in former alcoholics or drug addicts, the students were better able to understand what harm these substances can do.

"We realize that every student isn't destined to become an artist, but at least he can gain some appreciation of art from taking the art class," said Mr. Bruce Massoth, who has been at North for seven years. Mr. Ken Biberstein, who has been at North for eleven years, along with Mr. Massoth is responsible for teaching that appreciation.

Mr. Biberstein says that he felt the attitude towards art had changed in the last five years. Previously students had seemed to think art was an easy credit, but now they pursue it either because they have artistic talent or because they enjoy doing artistic things.

"The art program," said Mr. Massoth, "is a structured, well-thought-out program for teaching art." It is a building type system. "Each year builds on the year before," said Mr. Biberstein.

In the first year art, the student covered many areas, including perspective drawing, linoleum block printing, lettering, sculpture, and ceramics.

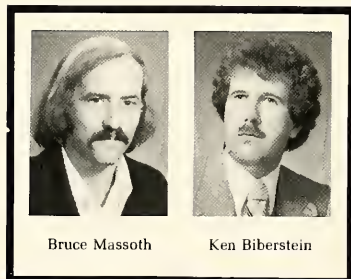

From there, a person would move on to second year art, giving him a minor in the subject. This course covered basically the same things as first year, but more in depth. Fibers, figure drawing, sculpture, and ceramics were stressed.

"At this point," said Mr. Biberstein, "we start weeding out the real art students. These will most likely be the ones that will go on to take art in college." At this level the student worked with paints, water colors, and acrylics, and learned different painting techniques and styles. A student also experimented with metalsmithing, which required the use of silver, brass, and copper.

An independent study class was offered for those students seriously interested in art as a future. The student explored photography, animated cartooning, and video and was able to professionalize his work in the specific areas he was most interested in; but the main objective was to compose a portfolio to be used for college purposes.

"The definition of art has suffered through the translation from elementary to high school," said Mr. Massoth, who also commented, "Students are taking art more seriously. We have a lot of younger brothers and sisters of past students taking art now, and that must say something right there."

Here, third year students use the overhead drop earphone sets for dictation and tests.

Mr. Lemke gives Junior Cathy Mather a few pointers on her Spanish while he gets the tape set up. French and Spanish classes use the tape to help with pronunciation.

C'est la vie

For one hour everyday, the 234 students in the Foreign Language and Culture classes transported themselves to another country. They did this with the help of Mrs. Donna Riethmiller in Latin, Miss Melinda Stewart in French and Mr. Paul Lemke in Spanish and Foreign Cultures classes.

To prepare their students better, the teachers concentrated on more than just vocabulary and grammar. In these classes the customs and habits of the countries were taught.

Not all of the learning experience came from books, though. Four foreign students, Anne Bauer from France, and Gustavo Lugo, Gerardo Akli, and Adrian Fernandez from South America, provided a first-hand look at what the people of different countries are really like and what a native speaker sounds like. Cultural dinners at local restaurants like the El Azteca and Escobedo's, and field trips were planned too. One of the trips took Spanish students to the Embassy theater to watch South American dancers.

With the primary purpose of giving the students a sampling of different cultures, Mr. Lemke taught the students a few phrases in German, Spanish, French and Latin. The pupils gained some insight as to how each nationality lives by studying their customs and lifestyles.

The students in the classes for one specific language prepared themselves, through the courses, for the future. Since many colleges require some foreign language experience to graduate, the classes gave students a head start over those who wait until college to study another language. Another point that was stressed was the fact that in some jobs a bilingual person has a better chance at a position than one who speaks only one language.

What's Cooking

One could walk down the 120 corridor at almost any time and smell the aroma of food being prepared. Breads, pies, and cookies were most common.

If a person were very lucky, he might even get to sample a little piece of the goodies. Few, though ever got as lucky as Mr. Howe, Mr. Massoth, Mr. Dickerson, Ms. Riethmiller, Ms. Moore and Ms. Johnson, the six people who were invited to the Thanksgiving dinner prepared by the second year foods class.

"It was the best selection of food that they've had in the six years I've been attending them," said Mr. Howe.

Turkey, ham, pork chops, potato skins, cranberry sauce, corn, green beans, radish tray, rolls, dressing, banana splits, and cherry cheesecake were prepared.

Besides the basic baking, frying, and preservation processes taught, the students tried unusual recipes with fruits and vegetables such as pomegranates, okra, and Chinese style cabbage.

Foods students weren't the only ones that did more than the required amount, though. Students were required to make pants or a skirt with a matching top, and some sort of macrame project, but some did more complicated projects like dresses or blazers.

Also included in the Home Ec Department was human development. This class discussed more than just the birds and bees. Marriage, family living, child care and dating problems were the main topics studied.

Interior decorating was included in the housing class. Color schemes, styles of furniture and furniture arrangement were taught with the help of field trips. They went, for example, to Sauders.

Budgeting money and learning about banking accounts were taught to students in home management when they maintained a fictitious bank account and budget.

Home Ec classes often had people come in from the community to do demonstrations. Here, Mrs. Wade from NIPSCO came to demonstrate effective ways to cook using less energy.

Making icing wasn't always the cleanest job, as Diane Flory and Dawn Cotterman found out when they had to clean up.

Sophomore Monica Godt learned how to work with foods as easy as butter and eggs. Students also learned to cook more difficult things.

Here, a student taking Metal trades works one of the machines. Students taking the course can specialize in Welding-Fabrication, Machine Shop and Metal Trades Co-op.

Horticulture students learn "by doing." They spend one-third of their time in class, learning skills, and the rest on field practice doing work on Fort Wayne park grounds.

Expanding the Classroom

R.V.C. is not a disease; it is Regional Vocational School.

Students participating in the program spent half of the day at school and the other half either downtown at the center or out working, getting on-the-job training.

Participants gained experience in any of eleven fields. The variety ranged from Beauty Culture to Construction Crafts to Health Occupations.

One hundred and forty students were enrolled in the courses which also included Automotives, Early Childhood Careers, Data Processing, Food Services, Graphic Communications, General I.C.T. Horticulture and Metal trades.

Mr. Alvin Harris, counselor for RVS said, "It's a very good program. I've seen many students profit from it."

UNDERCLASS

1. The first step in the process of the investigation is the identification of the problem. This involves a thorough review of the available information and a clear definition of the issue at hand. The next step is to gather data, which can be done through various methods such as interviews, surveys, and experiments. Once the data is collected, it is analyzed to identify patterns and trends. This analysis leads to the formulation of hypotheses, which are then tested through further data collection and analysis. The final step is the conclusion, where the findings are summarized and the implications are discussed. This process is iterative, meaning that it may be necessary to revisit previous steps as more information is gathered and analyzed.

10-0 Record Brought First SAC title to North Side

Coach Myron Dickerson commented at the beginning of the football season that if North had any hopes of doing exceptionally well, the defense would have to improve. They did, along with the offense, enough to pull off a 10-0 record and the first SAC championship since the conference was established. The number of good teams in the district, however, prevented the team from competing in the state playoffs.

The success prevailed as early as the jamboree. After almost a month of practice, the team showed everyone they were ready, for they scored against defending SAC champion Dwenger on the second play. They were able to repeat their early score in the Elmhurst game where they scored on the first play.

While they often took the early lead, the team also proved they could come from behind. The team toughened in the end to pull off a win in the Snider, Kokomo, and South games. In the latter two matches, a touchdown was made on a Scott Brown pass, to Kent Selby and Sim Nelson, respectively, with less than one minute to play.

All these victories didn't come easy. The team was fairly young, with only eight seniors that had been on the team for three years. The players worked hard in practice, where they concentrated on reading what the opponent was planning by the positions they set in. Doing this led to the touchdown pass in the South Side game; the play was changed after the team had set in its offensive formation.

The SAC title was just one of the many awards the football players earned. WMEE, a local radio station, selected them "team of the week" after the Mishewaka game and also "the team of the year." The team placed in the high school poll every week except the first, placing as high as fourth.

Many players received individual honors. Eight players were selected to the "Journal Gazette's" all-SAC team; co-captains Scott Brown and Kevin Wieble, Sim Nelson, Tim Hines, Tom Leto, Terry Lymon, Chris Ohneck, and Rick Slesman. Lymon also became the leading SAC rusher, rushed for 305 yards in one game, and was selected for the UPI all-state team. Sim Nelson received honorable mention in that poll.

Within the team, Chris Ohneck was presented with the award for outstanding defensive player while Scott Brown got the offensive award. The most improved award went to Scott Samuels, while Terry Lymon claimed the most valuable player title and Rick Slesman was honored with the "pride, hustle and desire" award.

Coach Dickerson attributed much of the success to his assistants, Kip Ormerod, Chris Svarczkopf, Dale Doerfler, and Dean Slavens. He said that they put in many extra hours checking video-tapes and planning the week's practices. The extra planning helped the team because the coaches often found the weak points of their opponents. Because of this, the team could key in on those weaknesses and gain momentum early in the game and in the season.

Quarterback Scott Brown learned early how to pass on the run.

Terry Lymon relied on both his blocking and his own individual moves to make him leading SAC rusher.

The defensive improvement took some of the pressure off of the offense, for they didn't need to score great amounts of points to win.

Plays were often sent in from the sidelines when substituting people.

Tim Hines not only ran for North, but at times he also passed.

Not only did Sim Nelson kick off, but he also punted and played defensive and offensive end.

During the game the coaches often discussed strategy with the players, as Coach Ormerod does with Chris Ohneck.

Stretching is a very important part in a contact sport, for injuries occur easily.

Reserves reach Experience Goal

The number for the reserve players was "2." Although the team, coached by Mr. Chris Svarczkopf and the other football coaches, earned a record of 2-6, that was the only "2" that wasn't magical.

Practices started in August, often two times a day. They practiced with the varsity everyday except Saturday. Often they would be the opposing team, pressuring the varsity into improving.

The games, though, were strictly to gain experience. Coach Svarczkopf explained the goal was not only to win but also to play each other in two quarters. He said that he "often went up and down the sidelines during a game, asking who hadn't been in two quarters yet." In the Luers game he succeeded in doing just that. Besides giving players experience, he found that this system kept all but three of the players from quitting, while other schools had more.

Two passes of over forty yards were completed during the Wayne game, but the Luers game highlighted the reserve season. With the help of two touchdown passes, the team came from behind to end the season with a win.

3 Points Kept Team From Regionals

Cross country is a sport, according to Coach Ken Miller, requiring as much mental preparation as physical training. Joe Hardesty, one of the three co-captains, agreed, adding, "Most of the runners were in basically the same shape. The people that won, however, were the runners that could run through the pain."

First-year Coach Miller, assisted by Dave Milligan, started preparing his young team early in July; three lettermen returned. In August, they traveled to Pokagon Park for a camping trip. The time there was spent pulling the team together as a unit and concentrating on some hard running before the season began. Teamwork was important because, though each member had to run his own race, they still relied on the support of their teammates while they competed.

The team improved greatly during the season, peaking in the last three meets. In the 5-7 season, one participant stood out. Greg Miller, a co-captain and most valuable runner, broke six course records. Tim Hattery, also a co-captain, and James Hardy received the awards for most improved and best sophomore, respectively.

The highlight of the season occurred in the sectional meet. With Greg Miller leading the way, the team proved their mental fitness and finished in sixth place, only three points away from qualifying for regionals.

Girls Developed into PowerTeam

Like all the other fall sports, the volleyball team began workouts before school started. They came back with some experience, for nine lettermen, five of them seniors, returned. They still were a young team, however, because four of the six starting positions were filled by juniors.

During the first week of practice, Coach Ry Taliaferro, assisted by Diane Cole, started reviewing the fundamentals. The team caught on quickly, and even by the first match they showed great improvement. All-SAC player Alice Modic paced the team as they developed into powerful hitters, some of the best in the city, according to Coach Taliaferro. The team's all-around play progressed with the season, so much so that they were sectional runner-up to state-contender Dwenger. In the semi-finals, the team reached their peak against Concordia. Showing the teamwork and hitting needed to make a winning team, they played up to their potential.

Modic's place on the all-star team wasn't the only recognition the players received. Karan Olry, co-captain along with Marie Ankenbruck, was named to the second team all-SAC. Olry and Modic were also awarded honors within the team, Olry named most improved player, Modic most valuable.

Team Improved as Season Went on

Headed by Coach Myron Henderson, with the help of Mr. Bruce Massoth, the young tennis team finished with a record of 1-12. The record, however, doesn't show what kind of season the team actually had. According to Coach Henderson, the team improved so much during the season that by sectionals, "they didn't look like the same team."

The initial step toward improving came in August on the first day of practice. With only three lettermen returning, the team knew they were working under a disadvantage of inexperience. The group seemed even younger because a freshman, was on the team for the first time in almost ten years. He was Todd Jordan.

During the first weeks of practice, the team concentrated on conditioning and skills. As the time for meets approached, the members scrimmaged more. Challenge matches sometimes determined who would play in each meet. Most of the players, however, didn't switch from singles to doubles, or vice versa. This was done because after playing with a person for a while, one learns to understand how the other plays, making a better doubles pair.

The pair that played at the head of the doubles teams was Roy Rodriguez, who also received the mental-attitude award, and Mike Didier. They were followed by the Scott Vakerics-Jeff Meyer duo. Captain Mark Lee was seeded number one in singles most of the year. Bob McCorkle and Jim Noel, most valuable player, competed right behind Mark.

By the season's completion, the team was playing very respectable tennis. Though they lost the final meets, the members had more tie-breakers and more individual points than they had had all season.

Jumping the net is one tradition of tennis that Scott Vakerics follows.

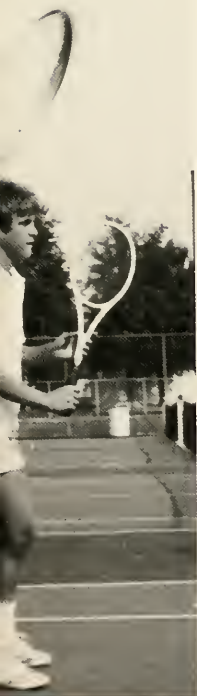

Ken Keller was one of only two sophomores on the tennis team.

The only way Dan Burtette and the other members of the team can improve is to practice serves and the other basics of the game.

Cheerers Help Whole School

Along with the teams, the cheerleaders represented North Side at almost all athletic events. They were there to help improve the spirit of the school by backing the teams. They promoted spirit through cheers at games and also through pep sessions before events.

The cheerleaders work began in the spring after tryouts. Once the squads, one varsity and two reserve, were picked, they started learning cheers and inventing new ones. The varsity members also attended a camp during the summer.

At the jamboree, they began their long "season." They cheered at the home games for all of the sports and traveled to some of the away games. They didn't finish cheering until after basketball was over.

Raising money and promoting school spirit came together for the squads. They helped the football team by selling buttons in October. During Christmas they joined the holiday spirit by selling jewelry which could be given as gifts.

Bottom row: Theresa Herber, Diane Sukow, Sheryl Kinder, Denise Sukow, Lisa Witherspoon; Standing: Deb Mosser, Carrie Schaefer, Cyrene Buchan.

Backing the football team was easy for Carrie Schaefer and the others because the crowd was enthusiastic about the good season.

Wrestling Takes Concentration

The inexperience of the wrestling team really hurt them. With only four varsity wrestlers returning, Coach Don Hunter, along with Mr. Chris Svarczkopf and Mr. Ryan Buzzard, set their mind to building a respectable team. Though the record was 2-10, the coaches feel the team improved greatly.

To produce results, the team worked hard on the techniques of the sport. They also spent time building their stamina through conditioning. Most of their experience, however, had to come from matches.

The hardest thing for the wrestlers to experience centered around their mental preparation. Each win or loss had to be dealt with on a personal basis. Even though there was a team score, the matches were completely individual. Each wrestler also had to push out of his mind the previous matches and concentrate on his opponent. Throughout the match, his mind had to be calculating how each move would effect his opponent.

Some of the wrestlers reached the concentration level needed to win. Mike Malone finished with a 13-7 record while Isaiah McGinnis reached a 11-7 record. Matt Hosier and Tom Whitmore placed high enough in sectionals to qualify for regionals; Hosier won the 155-pound division while Whitmore was runner-up in the 167-pound weight class. Hosier then went on to place second in regionals.

Coach Hunter described the season by calling the win-loss record "disappointing." He added, though, that much improvement had been made. Because of how little he could do for the wrestlers once they got on the mat, he admitted that his job was frustrating. He remarked, "I lived and died with each match." Unfortunately, he "died" often.

Girls Capture the SAC Crown

The girls' basketball team, coached by Miss Vickie Ottoson and Mr. Mark Tipple, managed a productive season. They won the SAC, earned a record of 13-5, placed second in both the Holiday and Warsaw tournaments, and were ranked as high as ninth in the state. Coach Ottoson felt the season "frustrating", however, because of its ups and downs.

Some of the instability came from injuries toward the beginning of the year. Injuries to Kelly Tomkinson and Kay Orly caused last-minute adjustments before some of the games. Another frustrating thing centered around the fact that all but one of the losses was within four points.

The team seemed to play well when it counted, though. During the regular season, they beat all the city teams. Coach Ottoson felt the girls played exceptionally well against Dwenger and Concordia when the SAC title was on the line. The Warsaw tourney was another highlight. The players beat LaPorte, who was rated in the top ten at the time, and went on to take Warsaw, picked first in the state, into overtime; Unfortunately, they lost by three points.

While the team made outstanding achievements, several players made marks of their own. Throughout the year, Lori Johnson, the team's most valuable player, Kay Olry, and Alice Modic all placed in the top twenty on the SAC scoring list. Johnson and Modic made the All-SAC first team and Olry was selected for the second team. At Warsaw Johnson was named the tourney's MVP while she and Olry were picked for the all-tournament team. The week following the tourney, TV-21 awarded Johnson the honor of player-of-the-week. Within the team, Lori Johnson was presented with the most-improved player award.

Reserves Develop Varsity Skill

Mr. John Stauffer, along with Mr. John Ankenbruck, headed the reserve basketball team. Their goal was to give members playing experience leading to a strong varsity team. Because of the success of the varsity, Mr. Stauffer felt that the time the reserves put in was worthwhile.

Several goals were involved. Just giving the boys time to learn to play with and as a team developed confidence. Evidence of this came even within the season. Because they weren't sure who would be playing each game, the reserves began the season slowly. After gaining stability, the team became well-rounded.

Another way the team prepared for varsity action centered around the defense. Much of the year the team concentrated on a man-to-man defense. Mr. Stauffer explained that this was emphasized because high school teams use the defense and it requires more work than a zone defense.

Though the record was 6-10, the team progressed satisfactorily in Mr. Stauffer's eyes. After overcoming the instability and injuries to players such as Todd Stine and Larry Magee, the team had some key wins toward the end of the season. They handed Harding their second defeat. They also had strong wins over Wayne and Dekalb.

In basketball there is a rule that prevents players from playing in more than 72 quarters, excluding tournaments and overtimes, in one season. Because many sophomores used their quarters playing on the reserve team, the sophomore team competed in only three games. They managed to defeat all of the opponents, East Noble, Elmhurst, and Huntington North.

Getting feet tangled up and slippery floors often combined to make James Hardy and other players fall.

Though the team played a man-to-man defense most of the season, they also played a solid zone.

Ups, Downs Evident in Team

Many problems faced Coach By Hey, his assistants John Stauffer and John Ankenbruck, and the varsity basketball team when the season started. The major ones seemed to be the youthfulness of the team and the lack of height.

The inexperience was noticeable early in the season. Because Tony William and Sim Nelson were unable to play until January 1, Coach Hey had to use many sophomores and inexperienced players as starters.

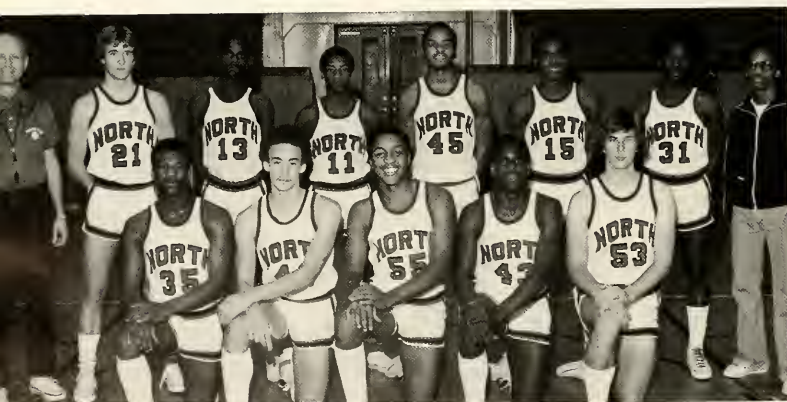

They also had to learn to play against much bigger teams. The members compensated for their shortness with their quickness and jumping ability.

By the New Haven game, the team was playing at full strength. The experience gained by the sophomores during the first month of the season and the addition of William and Nelson finally got the team playing well.

According to Coach Hey, though, the team still lacked the senior strength it needed. He felt that many close games were lost because of this. He did think, however, that the talent the team possessed allowed them to play with any team.

By sectionals the basketball team was playing respectably. They drew a first-round bye but then had to play South. They trailed during most of the game. In the third and fourth quarters, they fought back behind strong performances by Tony William, and all-SAC player, and Sim Nelson. They did not quite manage to beat South, however, losing 69-67.

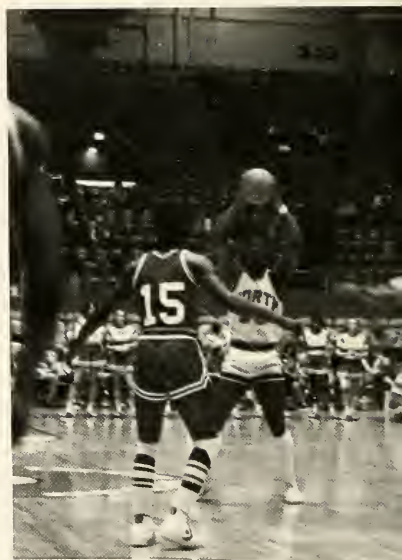

Even with all the setbacks, Coach Hey led his players to a winning record of 11-9. More importantly, he felt the season was good in the sense of gaining experience.

Coaches' Pasts Bring Expertise To North Side

by Joe Hardesty

Coaches are, for the most part, strangers to the fans who depend upon them to mold the athletes into winners. "What credentials does what's-his-name have to be coaching that team?" some may ask. Here are the credentials of a few.

Head Coach Ry Taliaferro summed up his reasons for molding his athletic career toward volleyball by explaining, "My expertise is in volleyball."

An accumulation of 15 years on the volleyball court as a player helped to mold his "expertise." In addition to his long playing career, Mr. Taliaferro, a physical education teacher, has also coached one year of the college game and three years on the high school level. Taliaferro noted swimming as his second coaching choice.

Myron Henderson has the longest coaching career in the city in the game of tennis. This year was his twenty-sixth at North Side.

"Tennis courses in college" were responsible for getting Henderson interested in the sport. "I worked through college and couldn't play for the team," he explained.

As a head coach, Henderson, a history and government teacher, has had his share of success. "John Ankenbruck was one of my best players. The team he played on was beaten only once in two years, and that was by the state championship team." Ankenbruck is at present North's head coach of women's track and assistant coach of men's basketball.

Ken Miller, head coach of the cross country team and assistant coach of the men's track squad, has been a trainer of both his preferred high school sports for 17 years. "I've run track and cross country all my life. Running is a great individual sport and a great character builder," informed Miller.

Mr. Miller's accomplishments as a track participant are nothing to ignore. He was a Ball State University record holder in both the high and intermediate hurdles. He also competed in the NCAA small college finals in the high hurdles.

Because of the individuality of it, Miller listed swimming as his next coaching choice. When asked why he chose to instruct running in high school, Miller stated, "Really, because I love it."

Kip Ormerod was an assistant football trainer and first year head coach of the men's track team. He has coached football for 15 years.

"I like the strategy involved in football. It's almost like preparing for a military engagement," Ormerod said. He added, "The game of life also has some qualities in common with football."

Ormerod, a sociology and psychology teacher, "likes all athletics," and went on to play basketball in college after enjoying sports at South Side. Following college, he has experienced a rich coaching career of athletics including swimming, baseball, and basketball.

Mr. Ken Miller is one of the coaches that enjoys his job simply because he loves the sport.

Mr. John Ankenbruck studies the players' movements during a game. Mr. Ankenbruck once played basketball and tennis for North.

The girls' coach, Miss Vickie Ottoson, constantly talks to her players on the floor.

Coaching by yelling at his players seems to work for Basketball Head Coach By Hey.

Don Hunter and Chris Svarczkopf coached wrestling. It's a difficult sport to coach because of the lack of input they have.

Gymnasts' Work Earns Honors

Coach Diane Cole considered it "excellent"; Assistant Coach Mike Morris called it "great!" Whatever the word, both coaches thought the gymnastics season good.

Coach Cole attributed much of their success to the girls' dedication and hard work. She explained that they had started in November with only one returning optional competitor, Karan Olry. To achieve the greatest amount of improvement, the team worked six days a week all season.

The work did bring improvement. At the Harding Invitational, the first meet of the season, the team placed above all the other SAC teams.

During the season they repeated that feat with all but one of the schools, Snider. An 8-1 record against city schools placed them second in the conference. Their only other loss came to an outstanding Leo team.

Going into sectionals, they were rated second to Snider. They were paced by outstanding performances by Cindy Goodman, who won every event, and Nan Didier and upset Snider for the championship. Leo, however, handed the team a defeat again at regionals, but the team placed a fine second.

Cindy Goodman, however, advanced to the state competition by placing second all-around in regionals after winning both the bars and floor-exercise. During the season she had been undefeated in the all-around competition in the SAC. Along with Nan Didier, she also landed on the Journal-Gazette's All-SAC squad. At state Goodman performed well, receiving a second on floor, a fifth on vault, sixth on bars and all-around.

Not only Goodman but also the rest of the squad excelled throughout the year, doing their personal best for the team. They earned the championships and individual awards to prove it.

Doing a front walk-over on beam was just one of the moves in Karan Olry's routine. She was the only returning member of the optional team.

Different dance styles were used by the floor competitors. Besides floor-ex. Cyrene Buchan did bars.

Laura Wyatt was one of the two freshmen on the team. Coach Cole thought she did quite well on beam.

With one of the best bar routines in the area, Cindy Goodman won the event in regionals. She also pulled in many other awards.

Gwen Davis and Cyrene Buchan discuss Davis' bar routine. Even though she was injured during the season, Davis was a strong competitor.

Competing all-around most of the year, Nan Didier was picked for the all-SAC team.

Intramurals Had Many Involved

For students not involved in varsity athletics, the intramural program provided a chance to compete. It also gave students, according to Mr. Ry Taliaferro, another opportunity to participate in a school organization.

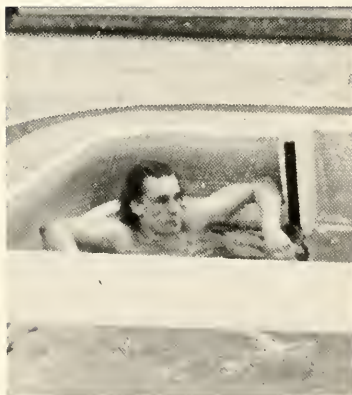

The program attempted to meet the variety that kids wanted. The first sport, swimming, began in November. The pool was opened up after school for those who wanted to swim. Once there, they could either free swim, dive, or play "splasketball," a water version of basketball.

While the pool was available after school, basketball was held before school. Students formed teams which participated in a round-robin tournament. Once the round-robin was completed, they then had a single elimination tourney.

Second semester brought on new games. Street hockey, set up like the basketball games, and ping-pong were both offered. The final sport touched by the program was volleyball.

By the year's end, over one hundred students became involved in the intramural program. This made it one of the largest organizations at North.

While drying his hair, Mitch Steiner headed into the pool dressing room.

Relaxing in the corner seems enough to please Rick Carey.

Mr. Dave Milligan throws the ball into Mr. Randal Liechty when playing on the faculty team.

Dribbling the ball is Dan Kramer. Dan played on the "Kickers" team.

Neal Davis takes a shot over the teachers. Many teachers became involved in the program.

Mr. Ry Talaferro organized all of the intramural activities for the students.

Aiming carefully, Sim Nelson lines up to shoot the ball in a splasketball game.

Different styles were used off the diving board. Stuart Cox is just unfolding from a front dive.

Pride Raised by Champions

Student athletes find themselves in a special spotlight as they build their futures and that of the school. Because the community tends to look at athletes as representatives of all students, competitors do much to effect the school's reputation. Outstanding athletes, for that reason, face a difficult job.

Redskin athletes seemed to handle the challenge well. Each team, as well as every individual, seemed to have the pride and dedication needed to represent North Side.

While not all the teams had winning records, each improved enough throughout the season to be content with the knowledge that they had done their best. Some, however, had that extra something to put them above the rest.

From the fall of the year, North strutted behind the football team. Each victory helped to give North a renewed reputation as a football power. The team managed to capture the SAC title and remain undefeated. Terry Lymon set new school records, like rushing for over 300 yards in one game, and was voted onto the all-state team, which Coach Myron Dickerson was picked to coach.

Another SAC crown was won by the women's basketball team. They too went undefeated in the conference.

One player, Lori Johnson, broke the school scoring record, making over 600 points in her career. She was also invited to try out for the all-state basketball team.

While the basketball girls were fighting as a team, one individual struggled to make his own impression. Wrestler Mat Hosier represented the team and the school at the semi-state meet. He had already managed to capture the sectional championship and was runner-up in regionals.

Later one more team put the Redskins on top. The gymnastics put on a spectacular performance to take their sectionals. Earlier in the year they had won the Harding Invitational, which included all of the SAC schools. This team too had an outstanding participant, Cindy Goodman. Goodman was undefeated in optional all-around in the SAC. She also finished ahead of the other competitors in every event in sectionals and in regionals placed second all-around. At state Goodman received a second place ribbon on the floor-exercise.

These outstanding competitors have left a mark for each student to be proud of. The same goes for the other competitors. Each team's attitude and dedication made the Redskin pride increase. For this they are congratulated.

Matt Hosier struggles against his semi-state opponent. He lost in this match after winning in sectionals.

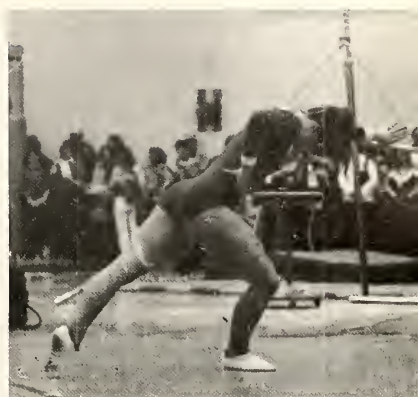

Winning was not unusual for Alice Modic, Kay Olry and Terri Kline, members of the girls team.

The gymnastics team waits for the announcement that they had won the sectional title.

Running brought Terry Lymon success. He rushed well enough to make the all-state team.

Cindy Goodman does part of the floor routine that brought her state honors.

The football's team's dedication made them the best team in the city.

Ball-handling, as well as shooting, seemed to come naturally to Lori Johnson.

4 POINTS OF THE DECA DIAMOND

1. The first step in the process of the scientific method is to make an observation or ask a question. For example, you might notice that plants in a sunny location grow faster than plants in a shady location. This leads to a question: "Does the amount of sunlight affect the growth rate of plants?"

2. Next, you formulate a hypothesis, which is a tentative answer to your question. In this case, you might hypothesize: "If a plant receives more sunlight, then it will grow faster."

3. The third step is to design an experiment to test your hypothesis. This involves identifying the variables you will manipulate and measure. In our example, the independent variable is the amount of sunlight (manipulated), and the dependent variable is the growth rate of the plant (measured).

4. You then conduct the experiment, carefully controlling for other factors that might affect the outcome. For instance, you would ensure that all plants receive the same amount of water and are planted in the same type of soil.

5. After collecting data, you analyze the results to see if they support your hypothesis. If the plants in the sunny location indeed grew faster, your hypothesis is supported. If not, you might need to revise your hypothesis and repeat the experiment.

6. Finally, you draw a conclusion based on your findings. This conclusion might be: "The experiment supported the hypothesis that increased sunlight leads to faster plant growth."

The scientific method is a systematic approach to investigating natural phenomena. It allows scientists to test their ideas and theories against evidence from the real world. By following these steps, scientists can build a body of knowledge that is based on objective observation and experimentation.

Honor Society Prestigious

Besides being one of the biggest clubs at North Side, the National Honor Society was perhaps the most prestigious.

Although the club was one of the largest, boasting sixty-six members, it was not the most active. Since its main objective was to recognize the scholastic achievement of outstanding North Side students, the club had only a few activities. The recognition ceremony, which was on May 4, most important.

Belonging to the National Honor Society is an honor, and a person had to be invited to join. Only persons with a high grade point average were considered. A Sophomore had to have an A average, a Junior had to have at least an A-, and a senior was required to have a B+ average.

Club officers were elected in February, and Senior Linda Michael was elected President; Senior Joe Weber, vice-president; Senior Beth McCorkle, secretary, and Senior Sue Sexton, treasurer.

Quill and Scroll Given to Four

To be a member of the Quill and Scroll, a national society which recognizes high school journalists, requires work and dedication. The club grants membership only to outstanding senior journalists. Each one had to be recommended by Miss Thiele to this group. They were picked on the basis of hard work, grade point average, and overall contribution to the school's publications. The list of the students was announced before the end of the first semester.

Due to unusual circumstances, one inductee, Khris Kessler, had moved from North before her recommendation had been placed. Miss Thiele, however, considered Khris' contribution to the Legend staff as ample qualification to present an application in her favor.

Job Squad Helps

The Student Council, according to Sponsor David Bierbaum, consisted of a most heterogeneous assembly from all types of students at North.

The Council provided the school with a wide variety of activities throughout the year. During the summer, the group began planning its biggest event of the year, homecoming. The week was filled with competition between the classes, as well as activities such as the dance to bring the whole student body together.

The group also did much to bring the community into the school. They held a Halloween party for the neighborhood children and helped needy families during the Christmas season. Elderly people received assistance from a group called the Job Squad who did such things as shovel snow. All of these things helped to give North Side its excellent reputation.

Seniors Linda Litten and Ann Mosher, members of the FSA, man a booth at the Student Council Halloween party.

Service Workers Run In School

During free periods many students helped the school run smoother by assisting teachers and secretaries with their everyday work. Though some teachers had people who typed for them or ran errands, the largest group of helpers were the ones that helped the secretaries, the gym teachers, the industrial arts teachers, and the librarian.

The secretaries put their helpers to work on attendance. Every period students were sent to collect the attendance cards from the teachers and then record them. They also ran errands and did any odd job they were asked to do.

While the service workers collected the attendance cards, the student leaders in the physical education department often took attendance as well. The teachers also used these students for demonstration purposes and for refereeing games during class.

The media center assistants too had a wide variety of tasks. They did everything from stocking and organizing books and magazines to checking them out and making cards for new books. Some workers helped Mr. Ted Crum coordinate and run the AV equipment.

The Machine Maintenance club was another club which worked with equipment. The members assisted the industrial arts teachers by checking and cleaning the machines. They also helped students who were having difficulty accomplishing certain tasks.

Amy Borders, Julie Norton and Cindy Longberry work on recording the attendance cards.

O.E.A. Wants Leadership

The members of the Office Education Association (OEA) were all members of the Cooperative Office education class. The purpose of the club was to prepare students for office occupations. Besides concentrating on just the mechanics of office work such as typing and shorthand, they also improved their poise, confidence, tact, and sociability.

One of the ways the members practiced their skills was on-the-job training. Many of the members held office jobs in the community. During Christmas, the group held a party for their employers and their parents. They also had a banquet for the employers in May.

Besides helping the community by working, the group raised money for the Special Olympics. They did this by participating in the Rock-a-thon in March. They also raised money by selling candy bars throughout the year.

FSA For The Future Secretary

Shorthand and typing were both involved in the Future Secretaries Association, FSA. Because the nationally-known club, sponsored by Mrs. Irma Johnson, did relate to businesses, it gave a good background for those who planned to be secretaries.

One of the ways the girls learned about a secretarial job was through speakers. At most of their meetings, secretaries from different occupations came to speak.

If a secretary was not available, the meetings still were of an educational nature.

Besides helping themselves, FSA also assisted the school. Some of the girls worked for teachers doing things like typing for them. They also participated in the Halloween party, even though they didn't have a booth.

Money was raised by offering gifts, stationery, and cards to students to buy.

Afro Club Cares For The Future

As one of the largest clubs in the school, the Afro Club brought students together to build better self images. The group, under the leadership of Mr. Alvin Harris, did this by teaching its members how to work together on group projects and to understand different types of people.

Some of the projects were for the whole school. They sponsored a dance after the North Side-Harding basketball game and sold hats to promote spirit during the boys' sectionals. They also held special activities for the school during Brotherhood Week in February.

Besides the school-involved activities, the group also had events just for themselves. In January, they held a skating party. They also had a bake sale to raise money. All these activities provided opportunities for students who might not be involved in many school-related things a chance to participate more in their school.

Council Collects Club Information

From every club one member was selected to meet with Mrs. Dana Wichern and participate in Club Council. The purpose of this club was to make sure the budget, club roster and other specifics about the club were kept up-to-date.

The club met only about three times during the year. The meetings, however, helped to bring the clubs together as one and also helped to convey messages between the organizations.

AFS Welcomes Exchange Students

For the four students used to the customs of another country, the American Field Services (AFS) provided help. The group, sponsored by Ms. Melinda Stewart, helped all the students adjust and, for the exchange students who came as a part of the AFS, they also provided financial aid.

The students involved in the group weren't just foreign language students. The club consisted of anybody who wished to learn more about foreign cultures. They shared some of what they learned with the school during International Week. They used the week, which was in January, to inform the school about differences and the similarities of countries all around the world.

DECA Helps Understand Business

The Distributive Education Clubs of America, DECA, was headed by Mr. Richard Irving. The club, which also was the D.E. class, brought some understanding of the business world to students.

Though they both centered on business, the club had two parts, the senior DECA and the junior DECA. Both of them learned basic business ideas, but the senior DECA was more advanced.

A number of things separated the groups. While Junior DECA learned about business, the seniors had a chance to experience it with on-the-job training. Most of the seniors had early release from school in order to work at the job supplied to them by DECA. The seniors also headed the Cafe DECA, which served breakfast before school.

The two groups were involved in some of the same activities. A national contest was held for all DECA members. While it started at the local level, there was also a state and national contest.

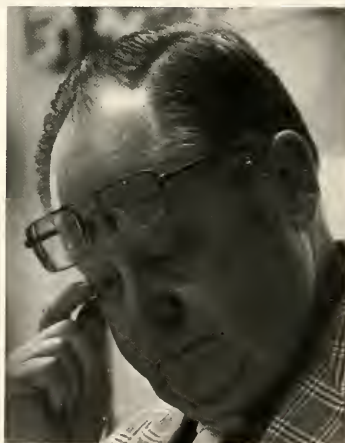

DECA proved itself useful to the community as well as the school. Businesses believed that DECA was a good way to prepare students for merchandising fields. One area business even put DECA before Junior Achievement when deciding which was more beneficial to helping students learn business.

Junior DECA members Jeff Michael, Neal Davis and Tony Watkins seriously discuss some class work assigned to them.

Speak Up and Be Heard

In some ways the members of NFL, the National Forensic League, resembled a sports team. The members, headed by Mrs. Claryn Myers, competed in meets on Saturday mornings, hoping for awards for their efforts.

Being a part of a national organization allowed them to find many schools in the area whom they could compete against. The one difference between this group and an athletic group was that while athletics is based on physical attributes, these matches were based on verbal skills.

Money for the expenses of the meets came from machines. The group kept the candy and pop machines full and also sold school supplies for profits.

Senior Lisa Wood, tired of practicing her speech, so takes a short break.

JCL Does It the "Roman" Way

The members of the Junior Classical League, JCL, centered their group activities around Rome. Not only did they study Rome in Ancient days, but they also studied the influence of Latin on our culture. They found that even the school system is based somewhat on the old Roman government system.

Many activities helped to make this national group entertaining to more than just Latin students. The club celebrated Halloween by setting up a booth for the party for the neighborhood children. They used a "Sater-nalia", meaning winter festival, to recognize the holiday season. During this they had a feast of Roman food such as roast duck. The Ides of March, commemorating Julius Caesar's death, also received recognition by the group.

They met with other Latin groups in the city for a day filled with skits, talks on Rome, and a picnic of Roman food to finish the year in a Roman way.

JCL—Row 1: Lora Gibson, Roberta Cornett, Debra Bartels, Debbie Smith, Brenda Overholt, Shawn Elliot, Monica Godt; Row 2: Tim Robi-

Junior Kevin Culpepper welcomes a late-comer, much to everyone's amusement it seems.

'Yesterday' Now

This book would not have been possible had it not been for the Legend staff. The planning started early in spring and continued on through summer. Even before school started, the editor, Khris Kessler, and Miss Norma Thiele, adviser, knew what would go on each page.

In planning the book, the staff hoped to cover most of the major events throughout the year. This was not always possible because of the lack of space, but a supplement was added to cover the hard-to-get spring events.

Most of the students on the staff had journalism fifth period. Some of the others, such as the photographers, worked during study halls or before or after school. During the days close to deadlines the staff had to work overtime in order to produce the best year-book possible.

Kellie Wilcox works on identifying the names of the students in the band pictures. She also worked on the sophomore section.

Row 1: Penny Puckett, Tammy Perkins, Khris Kessler, Deanna Reynolds, Natalie Parish; Row 2: LaVonya Moore, Laurie Litten, Jill Petrie, Pam Wood, Mike Hollander, Tracy Neale, Ed Eykholt, Laura Helmig, Kellie Wilcox.

Time is being spent by Laura Helmig on making out page designs. Laura's job centered on the senior section.

Tammy Perkins and Kellie Wilcox work on the senior directory.

The telephone made communications easy for Kellie Wilcox as she talks about getting pictures.

Deanna Reynolds picks out pictures to be used in the Legend. She served as assistant editor.

Key Club

Though it was the smallest club, the Key Club had quite a bit of input into the school and to the community. They initiated school spirit by selling suckers on "Lick'em Day" during Homecoming Week and by having a booth at the annual Halloween party. They also sold suckers on Valentine's Day and donated the profits to the Heart Fund.

According to Mr. Robert Lovell, the group, sponsored by the Kiwanis Club, opened itself to "anyone wishing to help the community and the school".

Besides the leadership of Mr. Lovell, the group had as leaders, Mike McCaffery, president; Roy Rodriguez, vice-president; Mark Lee, secretary; and Jim Noel, treasurer.

Thespians Study Theater Workings

The purpose of the Thespians, a national group, centered around establishing a foothold for anyone interested in theatrical work. Before anyone could be initiated into the group, however, they had to receive points from being active in some theater work. Most of the points were earned by participating in school productions.

Led by sponsor Mrs. Kathryn Neuhaus and president Peter Collins, the group met each Tuesday. During their meetings they enjoyed a presentation by one of their members. The presentations were skits, readings of poems or some other sort of entertainment. The group also attended several plays including "The Christmas Carol" and "Claude Kipnis."

Tim Perkins and Eric Hoffman discuss some plans for E.H. Productions.

Both Amy Lambert and Doug Geoffrey earned their Thespian points by performing in school plays.

Paper Product of Northerner Staff

The Northerner staff, advised by Miss Norma Thiele, put many hours into producing the newspaper, which came out thirty-two times throughout the year. Though they did have class time to work, the students spent much extra time covering school events and writing stories.

Most of the students on the staff had taken first year journalism. Some, however, were recommended by their sophomore English teachers to the Northerner as being capable writers. Though not all the students planned to go into the newspaper business as a career, the experience of working on the paper gave a basic background to those who did.

The Northerner did more than just report happenings. They promoted spirit for homecoming week through their coverage beforehand. They also added to the Christmas spirit by selling holiday greetings to those who wished to purchase them.

Discussing writing questions made work easier for Brad Reynolds, Barb Cowan, and Cathy Olofson.

Gwen Davis and Barb Cowan check the story assignment books to see what they should write.

The publications room was decorated for the holidays by Doug Housholder and Deann Brock.

Music Involves 250

Approximately 250 students participated in the performing groups of the music department. Of these students, most just took part because they liked music; very few planned to become music majors in college.

Though few students participated in both the vocal and instrumental programs of the department, some did perform for both. Even the teachers were separated into those groups. Dr. John Hill concentrated on the vocal part while Mr. Ed King headed the bands. Mrs. Julie Seeger, new to North Side, conducted the orchestras.

Four groups made up the vocal portion. Mr. Hill conducted the Training and A Cappella choirs, which gave students experience in singing. Tryouts in the spring prior to the school year selected the members of the Troubadours and the Madrigals. Both of these groups gave concerts for groups other than North throughout the year.

The band section also had four groups. Varsity band and Rehearsal stage band were considered stepping stones to the Concert Band and the Wildsiders, respectively. The Wildsiders, and the jazz band, performed in concerts and contests during the year. Mr. King also conducted the marching and pep bands. These, along with the Arrowettes, organized by Mrs. Claryn Myers, entertained during half-time of basketball and football games.

The smallest part was the orchestra portion, containing only two groups. The orchestra performed at the concerts at school. The String Ensemble, being smaller than the orchestra, performed for community groups as well as at school.

Senior Tim Boren, of the Madrigals, also practices for a performance.

Seniors Rick Slesman and Pete Collins discuss a piece of music for the Madrigals group.

The following information is provided for your reference. It is intended to be a general overview of the project and should not be used as a substitute for the detailed information provided in the attached documents.

The project is a comprehensive study of the impact of climate change on the environment. It is a multi-disciplinary effort involving scientists from various fields, including biology, chemistry, physics, and geology. The study is being conducted in a series of phases, with the first phase focusing on data collection and the second phase focusing on analysis and interpretation.

The data collected during the first phase will be used to develop a model of the climate system. This model will then be used to predict the future impact of climate change on the environment. The results of the study will be used to inform policy decisions and to develop strategies for mitigating the impact of climate change.

The project is being funded by the National Science Foundation and the Department of Energy. It is a collaborative effort between the University of California, Berkeley, and the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory.

The project is expected to be completed by the end of 2005. The results of the study will be published in a series of papers and reports.

If you have any questions or need further information, please contact the project manager at [redacted].

Sincerely,
